ROOM AND BIRD

FIRST THINGS FIRST

"Boys, boys, come back here!" Uncle Barney clucked with dismay one Saturday morning as he surveyed Fuzzy's and Wuzzy's cluttered room. "I guess you'll never learn our rule about doing first things first!"

"What do you mean?" Fuzzy asked with a puzzled frown.

"You know very well I told you you couldn't go out to play today until you both cleaned up this room," Uncle Barney sighed. "Honestly, I don't see how you can even walk in here, this place is such a mess."

"Gee, we're sorry," Fuzzy mumbled.

"Yeah," Wuzzy echoed, "we try to keep it cleaned up."

"Hub!" Uncle Barney snorted. "Your room is never cleaned up because you don't do first things first. Before you get any more toys out to play with, for instance, you should put your other toys away."

"Yessir," the boys chorused solemnly.

"Well," Fuzzy said, "I guess we'd better get started, or we'll never get through."

"There's my good boys," Uncle Barney praised. "I'm going to dash down to the grocery store now to do some shopping. When I get back, I want to see your room looking spanking clean. Okay?"

As Uncle Barney left the house, Fuzzy whispered to Wuzzy, "Golly, before we get to work on our room maybe we'd better stop to think if there's something else we were supposed to do first!"

"That's right," Wuzzy agreed. "After all Uncle Barney's lecturing, it certainly wouldn't be right to do second things first!"

When Uncle Barney returned from the store some time later, he was surprised to find the boys sprawled out in the living room.

"What's this? What's this?" Uncle Barney asked. "Finished with your room already?"

"Nope," Fuzzy shook his head, "we haven't even started yet!"

"Haven't even started yet!" Uncle Barney exclaimed in surprise.

"We're too tired to start for awhile," Wuzzy panted.

"But, but..." Uncle Barney sputtered.

"We were going to clean up our room..." Fuzzy started to explain, but before he could finish, the doorbell rang.

"Saved by the bell," Uncle Barney muttered as he peered out the window. "Oh, my goodness!" he groaned suddenly. "It's the Civic Improvement Committee! I forgot all about their coming around to make their inspection of the neighborhood this morning. Our yard is a mess, as usual!"

"Well, Barney, congratulations!" the committee chairman smiled when Uncle Barney opened the door. "You win the award for having the neatest yard in the whole neighborhood today! We're proud of you."

Uncle Barney gulped with astonishment as he stepped outside and glanced around his clean yard. "I hadn't noticed it before. Uh, I mean, thank you very much!"

The committee left, waving gaily to Uncle Barney over their shoulders.

Uncle Barney went back into the house and Fuzzy and Wuzzy laughed with glee.

"We cleaned up the yard after you left the house," Fuzzy explained.

"That's right," Wuzzy echoed. "We remembered you told us to do that job yesterday, so we hopped right to it. 'First things first,' like you're always saying!"

"My gracious," Uncle Barney smiled with pleasure, "I guess you two little rascals are beginning to learn, after all!"
